Have you noticed a new trend in our hobby? It seems as time continues to change so does our hobby. There is always something new and interesting to shake up complacency. There will always be changes and new trends, but who would have ever thought that the family truckster would be en vogue in a hobby traditionally dominated by fire breathing muscle cars and classic, top down cruisers. Yep, I'm talking station wagons.

The cars generally known as the utilitarian, grocery getting', kid haulers are starting to become more visible at the car shows. Truth be known, station wagons have been seen often on the quarter mile, back in the day, because of their weight transfer. So, they obviously made good drag racers. However, we're starting to see more of them in a restored state, usually in a modified version. It may sound strange, but I actually find it kinda cool.

I can recall a couple of mopar wagons my dad owned when I was a kid, remember this was before the minivan era. One was a 1972 Plymouth Satellite wagon. It was brown with the simulated wood panels. I can remember sleeping in the back on vacations and asking the age old question "are we there yet?" The other wagon of mention was a 1974 Plymouth Sport Suburban. Guess what color it was. Let's just say my dad liked brown.

It may seem strange, but lets face it, our hobby is a crazy thing sometimes and you never know what's next. I mean hey, wagons can be built to look cool and it's a lot easier stuffing a big block into a Coronet Crestwood wagon than a Grand Caravan. Hey, I said easier not impossible!
