EDITOR/TALK

Stop the madness! All Dodge Charger fans unite! The time has come to put an end to Hollywood's habit of destroying these cars. I mean why do they always choose Dodge Chargers for the climatic car destruction in film?

It all started in 1968 with a film called "Bullitt". The scene was San Francisco. The cars were brand new, a 1968 Dodge Charger and a 1968 Ford Mustang. The good guys were in the Mustang and the bad guys were in the Charger. Well, the good guys always win, right? It is one of the greatest car chase scenes in cinematic history, but the charger dies in the end. Fast-forward a couple of years to another movie involving a robbery, the chase and a car smashing into a train at the end. "Dirty Mary and Crazy Larry" switch from a 4-door Chevy Malibu to a 1969 Charger to complete the getaway. They beat the law but not the train. Down goes Charger! Then you have "The Dukes of Hazzard". Man, don't even get me started!

A few years ago they remade "Vanishing Point". It was a good flick but they also destroy a car. Guess what kind. Even now, with the scarcity of these cars, they have the gall to obliterate another one in "The Fast and the Furious". Somebody please stop it!!!!

Don't get me wrong, I really enjoy seeing my favorite cars portrayed as these gladiators of the muscle car era. What better automobile to play the part of the bad boys' hot rod? But could we please stop rolling these things into an early grave?! Kill a Nova or something. Lord knows there's plenty of those things runnin' around.

All of these movies are great viewing, but they all make you wince when the inevitable happens. Oh well, at least they killed off a Camaro instead of a Challenger at the end of the original "Vanishing Point"!

Mopar 2 Ya!
